

Nancy
Hanks
Lincoln
Public
Library

The Love Story of Ann Rutledge

Which Future Generations Were Destined to Read on the Sorrowful Face of Abraham Lincoln

By Eleanor Atkinson

Author of "The Boyhood of Lincoln," etc.

Drawings by Jay Hambidge

"Often the Two Were Seen Under a Sycamore on the Hill Studying Together"

LN THE sweet, spring weather of 1835 Abraham Lincoln made a memorable journey. Only one historian has noted it as a happy interlude in a youth of struggle and unsatisfied longings, but the tender memory of Ann Rutledge, the girl who awaited him at the end of it, must have remained with him to the day of his martyrdom. It was the beginning of his summer of love on the winding banks of the Sangamon.

He was returning from Vandalia, Illinois, then the capital, and his first term in the State Legislature, to the backwoods village of New Salem that had been his home for four years. The last twenty miles of the journey, from the town of Springfield, he made on a hired horse. The landscape through which he rode that April morning still holds its enchantment; the swift, bright river still winds in and out among the wooded hills, for the best farming lands lie back of the gravelly bluffs, on the black-loam prairie. But three-quarters of a century ago Central Illinois was an almost primeval world. Settlements were few and far apart. No locomotive awoke the echoes among the verdant ridges, no smoke darkened the silver ribbon of the river, no coal-mine gashed the green hillsides. Here and there a wreath of blue marked the hearth-fire of a forest home, or beyond a gap in the bluff a log cabin stood amid the warm, brown furrows of a clearing. But for the most part the Sangamon River road was broken through a sylvan wilderness.

It was a long enough ride for a young man to indulge in memories and dreams. A tall, ungainly youth of twenty-six was this rising backwoods politician. He wore a suit of blue jeans, the trousers stuffed in the tops of cowhide boots; a hat of rabbit-fur felt, with so long a nap that it looked not unlike the original pelt, was pushed back from his heavy black hair. But below primitive hat and unruly hair was a broad, high forehead; luminous gray eyes of keen intelligence, softened by sympathy and lit with humor; features of rugged strength, and a wide mouth, full and candid and sweet. His wardrobe was in his saddle-bags; his library of law books, most of them borrowed, in a portmanteau on his saddle-bow; a hundred dollars or so of his pay as a legislator in his belt, and many times that amount pledged to debtors. His present living was precarious, his only capital reputation, courage, self-confidence, and a winning personality; his fortune was still under his shabby hat.

But this morning he was not to be dismayed. Difficulties dissolved under this fire of spring in his heart; the sordid years fell away from him; debts no longer burdened his spirit. That sombre outlook upon life, his heritage from a wistful, ill-fated mother, was dissipated in the sun of love.

ON SUCH an April morning as this, four years before, he had first seen Ann Rutledge. She was in the crowd that had come down to the mill to cheer him when he got the flatboat he was taking to New Orleans safely over New Salem dam. Ann was eighteen then, and she stood out from the villagers gathered on the bank by reason of a certain fineness of beauty and bearing. Her crown of hair was so pale a gold as to be almost flaxen. Except that they were kind and happy, her eyes are unrecorded—blue-gray or hazel, perhaps, with brown brows and lashes. Her coloring was now rose, now pearl, changing like the anemones that blow along the banks of the Sangamon.

Hero of the day, the raw youth was taken up the bluff and over the ridge into the busy town of twenty log houses and shops. He was feasted in the eight-room tavern of hewn logs owned by her father, James Rutledge, and for an hour entertained a crowd of farmers, emigrants and shopkeepers with droll stories—stories that, unknown to him, would be repeated before nightfall over a radius of twenty miles. He was beginning to discover that men liked to hear him talk, and to wonder if this facility for making friends could be turned to practical use. But as a young man whose fancy had fed on few books and many dreams, it may have meant more that this beautiful girl waited on the table, laughed at his jokes—too kind of heart, too gentle of breed to laugh at his awkwardness—and praised his wit and cleverness and strength.

When he pushed his boat off Ann waved her kerchief from the bank. He looked back at her outlined against the green bluff, to fix it in a memory none too well furnished with such gracious pictures. He might never see her again. Poor, obscure, indifferently self-educated, unaware of his own powers, he saw before him, at that time, only the vagabond life of a river boatman or the narrow opportunity of a farm laborer. But he displayed such qualities on that voyage as to win his employer. In July he returned to New Salem as a clerk in Denton Offutt's store.

IT IS not probable that Lincoln was conscious of a pang when he heard that Ann Rutledge was engaged to marry John McNeill, proprietor of the best store in the town and of rich farming lands. Daughter of the mill and tavern owner, descended from a family of South Carolina planters that boasted a signer of the Declaration, a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court under President Washington, and a leader in an early Congress, she was far above the penniless, undistinguished store-clerk. In the new West ability and worth could push itself to the front as nowhere else in the world, but pioneer society was not so democratic that that birth and wealth had their claims to consideration.

Most girls, at that time, were married at eighteen, but Ann was still studying under the Scotch schoolmaster, Mentor Graham. Lincoln met her often at the "spell-downs" with which the school closed the Friday afternoon sessions. When he returned from an inglorious Indian campaign the next year he went to the Rutledge tavern to board. He had risen rapidly in public esteem, had captained a local company in the war, made a vigorous campaign for the Legislature, and betrayed a wide and curious knowledge of books and public questions. A distinguished career was already predicted for him.

He and Ann were last friends now, and for the next year and a half he saw her daily in her most endearing aspects of daughter and elder sister. It was a big, old-fashioned family of nine children, and Ann did the sewing and much of the spinning and weaving. At mealtimes she waited on the long tables, bringing platters of river-fish, game and pork from the kitchen fireplace, corn and wheat bread and hominy, milk and butter, honey and maple sugar, pots of coffee, and preserves made from wild berries and honey. Amid the crowds of rough men and the occasional fine gentleman, who could not but note her beauty and sweetness, Ann held an air of being more protected and sheltered in her father's house than was often possible in a frontier tavern.

"I Cannot Bear to Think of Her Out There Alone in the Storm" or talked politics. James Rutledge read the latest weekly paper from St. Louis or Kaskaskia, and kept a fond eye on Ann.

The beautiful girl sat there in the firelight, knitting lace or sewing; her skillful fingers never idle, but smiling, listening to the talk, making a bright comment now and then, wearing somehow, in her busiest hour, an air of leisure, with all the time in the world for others, as a lady should. In the country parlance Ann was always spoken of as "good company." Sweet-natured and helpful, the boys could always go to her with their lessons, or the little sisters with a dropped stitch or tangled thread. Lincoln attended the fire, held Mrs. Rutledge's yarn, rocked the cradle and told his inimitable stories. When he had mastered Kirkham's Grammar he began to teach Ann the mysteries of parsing and analysis.

After a school debate one night, a year before, Mentor Graham, one of those scholarly pedagogues who leavened the new West with learning, had thrilled him with ambition by telling him he had a gift for public speaking, but that he needed to correct many inaccuracies and crudities of speech. Textbooks were scarce, but he knew of a grammar owned by a farmer who lived seven miles in the country. Lincoln got up at daylight, filled his pockets with corn dodgers and went for that grammar. He must have bought it, paying for it in work, for he gave it to Ann—his single gift to her, or at least the only one that is preserved. Her brother Robert's descendants have today this little old textbook, inscribed on the title-page in Lincoln's handwriting: "Ann M. Rutledge is now learning grammar."

How eloquent that battered, faded, yellow-leaved, little old grammar is of the ambitions and attainments that set these two apart from the unrecorded lives of that backwoods community!

Ann was betrothed, and her content and trust in her lover was something beautiful to see, but McNeill's figure is vague. There is no description of him, and few facts about him are remembered except that he had prospered and won Ann Rutledge's love. In the stories of the region, that have now taken on the legendary haze of cherished romance, Lincoln is the hero long before he appears in the character of chivalrous sutor.

AFTER Mr. Rutledge sold the mill and tavern in 1833 and moved to a farm, Lincoln lived much of the time at Squire Bowling Green's on a farm a mile out of town. The jovial Squire was a Justice of the Peace, a sort of local Solomon, whose decisions were based on common-sense and essential justice rather than on the law or evidence. He had a small but excellent collection of law books that Lincoln was going through. His son William, who bore through life the unexplained nickname of "Slickly Bill" Green, was Lincoln's most intimate friend among the young men. He had been to Jacksonville College and had a boxful of textbooks. "Aunt" Nancy Green adored Lincoln and said that he paid his board twice over in human kindness and pure fun. Here he made his home most of the time until he went away to Springfield to practice law.

It was while he was living at Squire Green's, in the spring of 1834, that John McNeill suddenly sold his store and left for his old home, indefinitely "back East." The event turned all Lincoln's current thoughts and purposes into new and deeper channels.

The reason McNeill gave was that he wanted to bring his old father and mother out West to care for them on his farm. When he returned he and Ann were to be married. It was a long journey and not without its perils—first across to Vincennes, Indiana, down the Wabash and up the Ohio to Pittsburgh, then over the Alleghenies into New York State. It would be weeks between letters, a year at least before he could return. Many said openly that a man who was worth twelve thousand dollars, like John McNeill, could have his parents brought to him. What Ann thought no one ever knew. If she was hurt she hid it in her loyal heart, not cherishing it against him, and James Rutledge did not object. Of a race in which honor and chivalry were traditions it could not have occurred to him that any man lived so base as to break faith with his beloved daughter.

So Ann packed John McNeill's saddle-bags, putting in every little comfort her loving heart could think of or her industrious fingers contrive, stepped up on the toe of her lover's riding-boot to kiss him good-by, as he sat on horseback all ready to start, then bade him God-speed with a brave face and watched him ride out of her life.

LINCOLN was the New Salem postmaster. In his journeys about the country—surveying, working in the harvest field, electioneering—he carried the mail of such farms as he passed in his hat or his saddle-bags. The pioneer postmaster was the confidant of those he served, in the absence of ministers and doctors. People read to him the letters they received, complained of neglect, demanded of him sympathy in their joys and sorrows. And so it was he came close to the grief of Ann Rutledge. Weeks went by and there was no letter from the absent McNeill. Ann wrote often herself, tying the missives in wrapping-paper with stout string, sealing them securely and giving them to Lincoln to mail. Cheerful at first, her face grew wistful, her color fled, her singing voice fell silent. Too loyal to suspect, too proud to complain, what fears possessed the lonely watches of the night, what hope awoke with each dawn, those who loved her best could only dimly guess. Her head held high in the pride of a faith unshaken, she asked for her letter only with a look, but such a look as one could scarce endure, and the heart must ache to deny. Afterward she said that she thought of her lover as dead. Steamboats often blew up in those days; there were swamps along the Wabash and the Ohio where men died of malarial fever; there were treacherous places in the mountains where a stumbling horse could end, in unrecorded tragedy, the sweetest human drama. In her heart she set up a shrine to a consecrated memory. For the one blow Fate held for her she was unprepared.

In early summer there was a letter. Lincoln must have leaped on the nearest saddled horse and galloped out to the farm to give it to her. He slipped it into her hand unseen, saw the happy color flood her face, and watched her speed away to the river bank to read it. It was evening when she crept home again, in the radiance of the harvest moon, across the stubble of the wheat, like a dazed ghost.

It was not a letter that Ann could speak of to her father and mother with confidence and pride. McNeill had been ill on the journey—not so ill, however, that he could not have written. And his name was not McNeill, but McNamar. Family misfortunes had caused him to change his name out West so that dependent relatives could not find him, thus giving the lie to his excuse for going back. He said nothing about returning, showed no remorse for his neglect, did not speak of her tender letters to him. Perhaps, in the old home, he had not cared to claim them under the name by which she knew him. It was a strange letter, heartless and without a spark of honor. But Ann had loved the man for four years, plighting her troth with him at seventeen. Although he had wounded her inrooted affections and faith, apparently deserted her without a pang, placed her in an intolerable position before a censorious world, she could not put him out of her mind and heart. She wrote to him again, with no reproaches, and she kept her own counsel. Two more letters came at long intervals. Then they ceased altogether.

In every sparsely-settled neighborhood there is much curiosity about an unusual event, and some malice toward misfortune. Here offensive gossip ran about. It was reported that McNamar was a fugitive from justice—a thief, a murderer, that he already had a wife in the East. The talk enraged her father, and enveloped sweet Ann Rutledge in an atmosphere of blight. The truth—that he had tired of her—was surely not so bad as these rumors of criminal acts. With that element of the maternal that underlies the love of women for men she came to the defense of his good name. She showed her father the letters, laying the sacrifice of her rejected self on the altar of a lost, unworthy love.

But it had the opposite effect that she intended. In James Rutledge's Southern code this was the blackest thing a man could do. A thousand miles of wilderness separated him from the scoundrel who had broken the heart of his daughter! Was John McNamar to go unpunished? Not an old man, he seemed to break up physically under the blow. Public sympathy was with him and with the deserted girl. Her father was her lover now, surrounding her with every attention and tender care.

The Grammar Which Lincoln Studied as a Young Man

A NEW element was added to this absorbing drama when Lincoln began to pay open court to her, publishing it far and wide that he would be proud to win what McNamar had not cared to keep. A wave of enthusiastic admiration swept over the countryside. Nothing else was talked of in the town and around the mill. His chivalrous love may well have played its part in his spectacular campaign for the Legislature, and his triumphant election in August.

Ann gave no encouragement to his suit; but, as she shrank from the blunt perception of curious neighbors, she came to lean more on his devotion. It had in it, permeating its human quality, that divine compassion which, enlarged, was afterward to free a race. He wanted to free her spirit from the bonds of the past. In the early days of his wooing his personal hopes were put in the background.

He persuaded Ann to study with him again. All that long autumn they were together. Often the two were seen under a giant sycamore on a hill below the town and overlooking the river, Ann puzzling over conjugations, Lincoln sprawled at her feet reading Blackstone's Commentaries. It was such an extraordinary thing in that unlettered region that it was remarked ever after by those who saw it. It was an affair of public interest, and now of publicly-expressed satisfaction at the happier turn of events. The first frost touched the forests with a magic wand; then, with the snows of December, Lincoln rode away for his winter of law-making at Vandalia.

Now, indeed, letters came for Ann across the white silence that lay in the valley of the Sangamon. Dated from the State capital they were written with the quill pens and out of the cork inkstands the Commonwealth provided. Not one of these letters is in existence today. They could not have been love letters in the conventional sense, but eloquent of that large comradeship which love holds for men and women of rare hearts and minds. For the first time he had come into contact with the men who were shaping the destinies of his State, measuring his capacities with theirs and finding that he did not differ from them much in kind or degree. His ambition took definite form. He saw a future of service and distinction such as he would be proud to ask Ann to share.

WHAT pictures of men and the times he must have drawn for her! In those pioneer days only a few of the public men were backwoods lawyers like himself. Some, indeed, and many of the best, expressed the native genius and crude force that were transforming the wilderness. But there were Old-World aristocrats, to whom even the English language was exotic, from Kaskaskia and the French mission towns, more than a century old, on the Mississippi. And there were Southern planters and Eastern men, too, with traditions of generations of learning and public service. The capital was a tiny city, but it had high-bred society into which Ann would fit so well. There would be humorous anecdotes in those letters, too, to restore the gaiety of her heart, for, much as he loved men, their foibles and failings furnished him infinite amusement.

The lonely girl could not help being cheered by these letters and have her outlook on life enlarged by them, so that her own experience dwindled somewhat in the perspective. She wrote to him—friendly, girlish, grateful letters—saying nothing of McNamar, and showing how pathetically she leaned on him.

On his homeward ride in the sweet spring weather his mind dwelt on her with a tenderness no longer forbidden, no longer hopeless of its reward.

SQUIRE Green's farm lay a mile to the southwest of New Salem, so that, on this day of his return, he must have avoided the town, its clamorous welcome, its jesting surmises. In fancy he could imagine that lovable vagabond, Jack Kelso, fishing from the pier below the dam, catching sight of him out of the tail of a mischievous Irish eye, and announcing his arrival with a tender stanza from "Annie Laurie." The sympathy of town and countryside was with him in his wooing, and it warmed his heart; but today was sacred to love.

He turned from the road up the ravine that was watered by Green's Rocky Branch, toward the big cabin of hewn logs that nestled under the brow of the bluff. We know that a grove of forest trees surrounded it, and a young apple-orchard, in blossom in April, concealed it from the highway and river. If it was after the noon hour the men would have gone back to their plowing, and "Aunt" Nancy Green, in a gown of lilac print, be sitting with her patchwork in the orchard where she could smell the bloom, keep an eye on strolling, downy broods and watch the honey-bees fill her hives. The Squire was there, too, very likely, tilted back in his wide chair of hickory splints, asleep. He was a well-to-do man, and as he weighed two hundred and fifty pounds he took life easy, and was never far away from the slender shadow cast by busy "Mother."

"Yes, Bill was some'er 'round," but lively "Aunt" Nancy ventured an affectionate joke, saying she "reckoned Abe wasn't pavin' to see Bill as much as he was some one else." She was willing to get his dinner in the middle of the afternoon, but he had to pay for it with his best new stories.

A visit with "Aunt" Nancy, his books arranged on the shelf he had built above his table in the chimney-corner, a bath in a warm, shallow pool in the Branch, then up the ladderlike stair to the loft chamber he had shared with the friend of his youth, to dress for Ann!

LINCOLN is described, about this time, by Harvey Ross, who carried the mail over the Star Route of Central Illinois, as having a summer suit of brown nankeen, with a white waistcoat sprigged with colored flowers. The wide, soft collar of his white shirt rolled back over a neckcloth made of a fringed, black silk handkerchief. His hat was of brown buckeye splints, the pioneer substitute for straw. It was in this fashion he must have appeared as he walked back along the river and across the fields, when he went to urge his love for Ann Rutledge.

In old patchwork quilts, cherished as the work of our great-grandmothers, we may see today bits of cotton print—white with colored pin-dots, indigo-blue and oil red, and violet and pink grounds powdered with tiny, conventional figures and flowers in white. A young girl like Ann would have one such pink gown to wear on warm evenings, and a quilted and ruffled sunbonnet of sheer muslin, not to wear seriously, but to hang distractingly by the strings around her white neck. There was little self-consciousness about her, and no coquetry at all. Ann never teased. She was just simple and sincere and sweet. But it would be instinctive with her to pick up the grammar, as an excuse for the stroll along the bluff with her lover.

When they came to where the sycamore was weaving its old, fairy web in the sunset light she laid the bonnet on the grass, and listened to his stories and comments on the new men and things he had seen until he made her laugh, almost like the happy girl of old tavern days: for Lincoln was a wizard who could break the spell of bad dreams and revive dead faiths. A pause, a flutter of hearts as light as the leaf shadows, and a hasty question to cover the embarrassment. There was a puzzling point in her grammar lesson—how can adverbs modify other adverbs?

Yes, he had been puzzled by that, too, and Mentor Graham had helped him with an illustration: "I love you very dearly!"

Oh, yes, she understood now! A burning blush, a gasping sigh at the shock of flooding memory. She still struggled to forget this blighting thing. But could she ever again listen to such words without pain or shame? She had the courage of a proud race. If her lips trembled she could at least lift her eyes to meet that immortal look of brooding tenderness. And she could ask timidly if he would hear her recite the conjugation of the regular verb to see if she had forgotten.

WHY is it that those sober old grammars, full of hard-and-fast rules—and bewildering exceptions—still instinctively chose the one verb ardent youth conjugates with no teaching at all? First person, singular number, present tense, declarative mood, "I love"; transitive, requiring an object to complete its meaning, as life itself requires one—"you."

No pause! The story never begins there nor ends. How tireless that confession; how thrilling that mutual self-analysis; what glamour over every aspect! Past, to the beginning of things, future to eternity; the insistent, pleading interrogative, "Do you love?"; the inevitable continuing state, "loving"; the crown of immortality, "to have loved." Then that strange, introspective subjunctive, wild with vain regret, that a few lonely souls have had to coin in the sad evening of empty lives: "If we had loved."

Oh, sweet Ann Rutledge, could you endure to look back across such arid years and think of this lover, denied? No! No matter what life and its experiences yet held for them of joy or sorrow in years to come, the conjugation of this verb is to be finished with the first person plural, future perfect, declarative. At the very worst—and best—and last, robbing even death of its sting, at least: "We shall have loved."

"ONEITA" UNION SUITS

WEAR "Oneita" Union Suits and you will never be content to go back to the old habit of two-piece undergarments. From neck to ankle—not a wrinkle to mar the symmetry of fit. Easier to don—just one thickness all over and just the desired warmth. Made from the finest softest yarn, with wondrous elasticity to afford complete freedom of motion to all parts of the body.

The shapeliness of "Oneita" Union Suits is lasting, being the same after repeated washings as the first day of their service. They follow the precise lines of the body—no wrinkling under the corset or stocking, but helping the drape and fit of the outer apparel to a marked degree.

Warmth, style and common-sense in one. For Women and Children in button-down-front and cross-cut styles.

For Men in button-down-front style only.

All standard sizes—guaranteed absolutely correct.

A postal request brings our own Booklet—"REAL UNDERWEAR COMFORT"

ONEITA KNITTING MILLS
UTICA, NEW YORK

We Want a Reliable Woman

to act as our agent in every locality where we have none, and we will give her the exclusive rights for her territory.

It costs you nothing to start as our agent, for we furnish you samples and a neat case for them, without any charge.

Write us to day for further details, amount of commission, etc. Be the first to write from your town.

The W. H. Wilcox Co., 1 Mollatt Ave., Binghamton, N. Y.

Have you ever seen and examined Sanitas?

If you haven't, ask your dealer to show it to you before you select a new covering for any room of your house. Sanitas is equal in design, coloring and tone to the most expensive wall papers and lasts ten times as long. It costs no more than good cartridge paper.

Sanitas is printed in all colors on strong muslin. It cannot fade, discolor, or crack or tear with the plaster. A damp cloth instantly cleans it; no dirt takes hold.

Glazed like tiling for bathrooms and kitchen; beautifully dull finished for the rooms and halls.

Write to our Special Department of House Decorations. State which rooms you desire to decorate, and receive, free, special samples and suggestive sketches of clever new interior treatments. Write today.

STANDARD OIL CLOTH CO.
318 Broadway, New York City

"Wipe off the Dirt."

THE LOVE STORY OF ANN RUTLEDGE

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 18)

And so they sat there in the peaceful evening light, looking out across the river with the singing name, that purrs and ripples over its gravelly bars, and sings the story of their love forever.

No one who saw the two together that summer ever forgot it. Pioneer life was too often a sordid, barren thing, where men and women strived on bread alone. Courtship, even, was elemental, robbed of its hours of irresponsible idleness. To see any one rise above the hard, external facts of life touched the imagination of the dullest. In his public aspect a large part of Lincoln's power at this time was that he expressed visibly community aspirations that still lay dormant and unrecognized. Now he and Ann expressed the capacities of love of the disinherited. To the wondering, wistful eyes that regarded them they seemed to have escaped to a fairer environment of their own making: of books, of dreams, of ambitions, of unimagined compatibilities.

LINCOLN'S sold ties of affection were Ann's now, dear and familiar, as in his old griefs. In retrospect she shared that tragic mystery of his childhood, his mother's early death. And, like all the other women who ever belonged to him, she divined his greatness—had a glimpse of the path of glory already broadening from his feet. She set her own little feet in that path, determined that he should not distance her if she could keep up with his strides. They could not be married until he was admitted to the bar, so she took up her old plan of going to Jacksonville Academy. Her brother David was going to college there, and then was to study law with Lincoln. What endearing ties were beginning to bind him to her family! They spent long afternoons studying, and Lincoln made rapid progress, for his mind was clear and keen, freed from its old miasma of melancholy.

Ann studied fitfully, often looking off absently across field and river, starting from deep reverie when he spoke to her. Her mother noticed her long, grave silences, but thought of them as the pensive musings of a young girl in love. This impression was increased by her absorption in her lover. When with him, talking with him, a subtle excitement burned in her eye and pulsed in her cheek; when he was gone the inner fire of her spirit seemed to turn to ashes. She clung desperately, visibly, to her new love—so infinitely more precious and satisfying than the old.

People remembered afterward, as the days lengthened, how fragile Ann looked, as if withered by hot, sleepless nights: how vivid and tremulous. She had spells of wild gaiety, her laughter bubbling up like water from a spring, and she grew lovelier day by day. And there were times, when Lincoln was away, in the harvest field or on surveying trips, that she sat pale and listless and brooding for hours, with hands that had always been so busy and helpful clasped idly in her lap.

Left alone she became the prey of torturing thoughts. Life had dealt Ann Rutledge but one blow, but that had struck to the roots of her physical and spiritual life. Her world still tottered from the shock. If she had confessed all her first vague, foolish fears her mind might have been freed of their poison. But she came of brave blood and tried to fight her battle alone. At last, worn out with mental and moral wrappings, she turned to her father for help. Lincoln was working at high pressure and he had some perplexities of debts; she shrank from troubling him. Her heart must have been in slow, suffocating throbs when she crept to her father's arms and confessed her fears.

What if McNamar should come back?

She need not trouble her head about that! The country would be too hot to hold him.

But what if he still loved her, trusted her, was on his way back, confident and happy, to claim her? What if he could lift this veil of mystery and stand forth clear and manly?

McNamar would never appear in such guise, bless her innocent heart! He was a Lincoln-hearted scoundrel. In the old days, in South Carolina, men of the Rutledge breed would have killed such a hound.

BUT her father was alarmed now at this strange obsession, and questioned her. And then the whole pitious truth was out. She was afraid he would come back. And she loved him no longer. She had been so happy, and then it began to seem all wrong. Could she endure happiness purchased at the price of another's misery? McNamar had come back, indeed, and love was impotent to defend this hapless innocence! She had never understood his behavior. Incapable of such baseness herself, she had never comprehended his. Like a flower she had been blighted by the frost of his desertion, and had revived to brief, pale life in a new sun, but the blight had struck to the root. Lincoln was sent for, but he was not found at once, for his employments kept him roving far afield. Round and round in constantly contracting circles her inverted reason, goaded by an accusing conscience, ran until, at last, her sick fancy pictured herself as the faithless one. The event was forgotten—she remembered only the agony of love forsaken. And so she slipped away into the delirium of brain fever.

Lincoln had one anguished hour with her in a brief return to consciousness. It was in the living-room of a pioneer log cabin, untouched by grace or beauty; homely, useful things about them, the light on her face coming through a clapboard door open to the sun and wind of an unspoiled landscape. The houses of the wealthiest farmers were seldom more than two big rooms and a sleeping loft, and privacy the rarest, most difficult privilege. Her stricken family was in the kitchen or outdoors, to give them this hour of parting alone. What was said between them is unrecorded. When Ann fell into a coma Lincoln stumbled out of that death-chamber like a soul gone blind and groping.

Two days later Ann Rutledge died. The tragedy shocked the country for twenty miles around. It had the elements and proportions of a classic tale, so that today, when it is three-quarters of a century gone by, the great

CONCLUDED ON PAGE 77

Try the Maish sleep under one see the difference

Send for a sample of this wonderful filling. Compress it. Then watch it expand.

Maish Laminated Cotton Down

YOU wouldn't believe there could be such a difference!

To that they could be so warm, yet so wonderfully light!

Get warmth without weight, the Maish Comfort is made by a wonderful new process.

The long fibers of the choicest snow-white cotton are separated, curled and then woven into one continuous, soft, downy layer—the same fluffy thickness throughout—no lumps, no thin places.

It is this filling that makes the Maish Comfort so luxuriously warm, yet wonderfully light. That makes it surprisingly supple and buoyant, instead of being heavy and burdensome.

We want you to know the absolute restfulness of sleep under a Maish. It allows you to relax, gives a sense of freedom, of ease you can't imagine until you try it.

The new Fall patterns are exquisite. Glorious new poppy designs, Oriental and Shirley, dainty rose, daisy and chrysanthemum patterns in silkolene, sateen and silk. All sizes, ranging in price for full sizes from $3.00 in silkolene to $18.00 in silk; bassinette (baby comfort), $1.25 and up; crib, $1.75 and up.

Look for the name and trade-mark sewn in silk to each comfort. Don't accept a substitute—if your dealer hasn't the Maish, write us. We shall give you the name of one who has or supply you direct.

THE CHAS. A. MAISH CO., 1125-1135 BANK ST., CINCINNATI

Baby Comfort, $1.25 and up.
Crib, $1.75 and up.
Full size, from $3 in silkolene to $18 in silk.

Maish Comforts

Luxuriously warm, yet wonderfully light

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"
Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set!
From seven dollars to U. S. CUNNINGHAM.

AGENTS

are selling money—selling from 50 to 500 sets per week. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $5 to $10 a day. ODD IT FREE to workers.

THOMAS MFG. CO.
441 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

Don't Throw it Away

Does Your Granite Dish or Hot Water Bag Leak? USE "MENDETS"

A PATENT PATCH that mends all leaks in all utensils—tin, brass, copper, granite, hot water bags, etc. No solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them; fit any surface; two million in use. Send for sample, package 10¢. Complete package assorted sizes, 25¢, post-paid. Agents wanted. COLLETTE MFG. CO., Box B, AMSTERDAM, N. Y.

100 ENGRAVED WEDDING ANNOUNCEMENTS $700

Including inside and outside envelopes, and express paid. Visiting cards, At Home and Reception cards of the famous Elliott Standard. Samples on request.

THE CHAS. H. ELLIOTT CO., 1634 Lehigh Avenue, Phila.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks
Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick-rooms. Warm in milder localities, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail, 25¢ a pair. Parker pays postage.

Catalogue free. Look for Parker's name in every pair.
J. H. Parker Co., Dept. I, 25 Jamaica St., Malden, Mass.

SKIRTENE

A Dress Trimming and Binding

The lightest, softest, daintiest and most durable binding material guaranteed not to shrink, pucker or fade. For sale at Dry Goods and Department Stores, in all shades. Send for free sample.

SCHLEGEL MFG. CO., 34 Canal St., Rochester, N. Y.

FREE EMBROIDERY Catalog N

Every woman should have this catalog. It is the most interesting book of the kind ever issued for free distribution. 96 pages of latest designs in Wallpaper, Lacy, Dairy, Repousse, Braid, Shadow, Cinnamon Cord, Eyelet and Silk Embroidery. Stamped Linens, Pillow Covers, Perfected Patterns and descriptions. All Stamping Quilts at lowest prices. Write at once for FREE Catalog.

96 Pages
F. Herrscher, 6467 Marshfield Av., Chicago

X-RAY Stove Polish

At All Dealers Write Us for FREE SAMPLE

SHINES EASIEST SHINES BRIGHTEST
CANNOT EXPLODE LASTS LONGEST

LAMONT, COLLIS & CO., Sole Agents, Dept. B, 78 Hudson St., New York

THE LOVE STORY OF ANN RUTLEDGE

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE 76)

grandchildren of those who witnessed it speak of it with hushed voices. Lincoln's mission and martyrdom imbued it with those Fates that invest old Greek drama. James Rutledge died three months later, at the age of forty-four, of a broken heart; the ambitious young brother David, who was to have been Lincoln's partner, died soon after being admitted to the bar. The Rutledge farm was broken up, the family scattered. Lincoln came to the verge of madness.

A week after the funeral William Green found him wandering in the woods along the river, muttering to himself. His mind was darkened, stunned by the blow. He sat for hours in brooding melancholy that his friends feared would end in suicidal mania. Although some one always kept a watchful eye upon him he sometimes succeeded in slipping away to the lonely country burying-ground, seven miles away. There he would be found with one arm across her grave, reading his little pocket Testament. This was the only book he opened for many months.

ALL that long autumn he noticed nothing. He was entirely docile, pitifully like a child who waits to be told what to do. "Aunt Nancy kept him busy about the house, cutting wood for her, picking apples, digging potatoes, even holding her yarn; and the men took him off to the fields to shock and husk corn. All of them tried, by constant physical employment, to relieve the pressure on his clouded brain, love leading them instinctively to do what the wisest doctors do today. In the evenings he sat outside the family circle, sunk in a brooding study from which it was difficult to rouse him. It was a terrible strain to those devoted friends who protected and loved him in that anxious, critical time. Not until the first storm of December was there any change.

It was such a night of wind and darkness and snow as used to cause dwellers in pioneer camps, isolated in a broad study from which it was difficult about, shut in, and cut off from other human life by the tempest, to pile the big fire-place with dry cordwood, banking it up against the huge back-log, and draw close together around the hearth to watch the flames roar up the chimney. There would be hot mulled cider to drink and comforting thins to eat, and cheerful talk.

Lincoln was restless and uneasy in his shadowy corner. His eyes burned with excitement. When he got up and wandered about the room William followed him, fearing he might do himself harm. He went to the door at last, threw it open and looked out into the wild night. Turning back suddenly, his hands clenched above his head, he cried in utter desperation:

"I cannot bear to think of her out there alone, in the cold and darkness and storm."

The ice of his frozen heart was unlocked at last and his reason saved. But there were months of bitter grief and despair that wore him out physically.

His fits of melancholy returned, a confirmed trifle that he never lost. In time he went back to his old occupations, bearing himself simply, doing his duty as a man and a citizen. His intellect was keener, his humor kinder; to his sympathy was added the element of compassion. And on his face, in his eyes and on his mouth, was fixed the expression that marks him as our man of sorrows, deep and irremediable.

UNTIL he went away to Springfield a few years later to practice law he disappeared at times. Every one knew that he was with Ann, sitting for hours by the grassy mound that covered her. He said to William Green: "My heart is buried in the grave with that dear girl."

The place was in a grove of forest trees on the prairie at that time; but afterward the trees were cut down or neglected, and it became choked with weeds and brambles—one of those forlorn, country burying-grounds that marked the passing of many pioneer settlements. For in 1820 New Rutledge died Lincoln surveyed and platted the city of Petersburg, two miles farther north on the river. A steam mill built there drew all the country patronage. Most of the people of New Salem moved their houses and shops over to the new town, but the big tavern stood on the site and the logs were hauled away for firewood. The dam was washed out by floods, the mill burned. Today, the bluff on which the town stood has gone back to the wild, and the site is known as Old Salem on the Hill.

The Bowling Green farm passed into the possession of strangers. Many years ago the site of heavy logs was moved from under the brow of the bluff down to the bank of the river, and turned into a stable. More than eighty years old now, this primitive structure, that was Lincoln's home for five years, still stands. Every spring it is threatened by freshets. You look across the flooded bottomland to where it stands among cottonwoods and willows, and think—and think—that this crumbling ruin, its squared logs worn and shrunken and parted, its clapboard roof curled, its crazy door sagging from the posts, rang to that cry of desolation of our country's hero-martyr. He lies under a towering marble monument at Springfield, twenty miles away. There is his crown of glory; here his Gethsemane.

TWENTY years ago Ann Rutledge was brought in from the country burying-ground and laid in Oakland Cemetery, in Petersburg. Only a field boulder marks the mound today, but the young girls of the city and county, who claim him as their own, are to celebrate Lincoln's centennial year by setting up a slender shaft of Carrara marble over the grave of Lincoln's lost love. Around her, on that forest-clad bluff, lie Old Salem neighbors. It is a cheerful place, where gardeners mow the grass and sweep the gravelled roadways, where straggle drive-in lawns are laid lavishly on new-made graves.

No longer is she far away and alone, in cold and darkness and storm, where he could not bear to think of her, but lying here among old friends, in dear, familiar scenes, under enchantment of immortal youth and deathless love, on a sunny slope, asleep.

Flow gently, sweet Sangamon; disturb not her dream.

Streit Davenport Bed the simplest made

No covered mechanism. Nothing to get out of order.

In the ordinary davenport bed, the mechanism is concealed. Upon hidden hinges, cogs and catches depend the change from davenport to bed. To repair these when broken, the upholstering must be torn up!

In the Streit, there are positively no mechanical devices, concealed or otherwise. Simply let down the back and you have a complete, full size double bed. Acts promptly. Can't fail, there is nothing about it to catch or break.

As a bed it is luxurious enough to offer any guest. Not a hint of a davenport about it.

Made in all styles, including Mission, Colonial, Louis XV, Empire, Etc., and in any material, leather, velour, tapestry, etc. The workmanship is careful and thorough—for example, all tufting is done with steel clinch buttons, guaranteed never to come out.

WRITE FOR OUR FALL CATALOGUE See the new Streit styles.

Then go to your dealer's and order the one you like best. If, for any reason, it doesn't suit you, return it within thirty days and your money will be refunded.

(This offer is on the Streit Guarantee Ticket, tied to every piece. Save it.) Not Streit's without this trade-mark. If your dealer hasn't it, we will supply you direct.

We have just published a portfolio of sketches, showing what other women have accomplished with small rooms. You would find it both interesting and helpful. May we send you a copy?

No ridge down the middle. Full-width head and foot-boards. Fully protected from drafts, your covers tuck in, your pillows stay on. Dust-proof wardrobe box under seat.

The C. F. Streit Manufacturing Co., 1048 Kenner Street, Cincinnati

Try and conceive something lovelier than you have ever seen, issue from a silk, loom before—something as soft and fine and fluy as a butterfly's wing—and you will begin to appreciate the beauty of the new fabric wrought from a fibre and fashioned into a score of attractive forms for Women's wear—the most popular of which is the Senorita Silk-Spun Scarf, shown in the picture.

Silk-Spun

Fancy a silk scarf that shines like spun glass—15 inches wide and 72 inches long, with handsome fringe, boxed and sent to you by prepaid mail or express for $1.50. Longer and wider scarfs, also fancy designs, $2.25 and $3.00.

Buy one from your dealer. If you can not, send us his name and your order, specifying length, width and color. Or, if you wish to await samples and descriptive booklet before buying, we will send them free.

Senorita Scarfs come in white, ecru, black, pink, light blue, navy blue, peacock blue, heliotrope, orange, champagne, mode, cardinal, wine, etc. Figured designs, if desired, same color as ground or in contrasting color, at $1.00.

Sent in attractive box, very appropriate for gift purposes. Sold by the yard, makes up beautifully for waists, evening gowns, petticoats, blouses, shirtings, yokes, hat or dress trimmings, fancy costumes, etc., 27 and 45 inches wide, $1.00 and $1.50 a yard. Same color as the scarf.

Silk-Spun is the most popular fabric among women everywhere. Don't omit your dealer's name when writing.

The Ohio Knitting Mills Company, Toledo, O.

BECOME A NURSE

We have trained thousands of women in their own homes, to earn $12 to $30 a week.

We give the practical nurse and the beginner the best methods of modern nursing.

Seven years' experience with 6200 student-nurses has produced a course whose efficiency is attested by more than 1500 physicians and patients. Its success is proved.

Send today for 52-pp. Blue Book explaining our method; interesting stories of experience by our graduates and endorsement by physicians.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing 315 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Miss Janet Gilchrist, Owen Sound, Can., and her twin "patients," a graduate of 1907. She writes: "I have all the engagements I can accept."

Serpentine Crêpe

the most attractive cotton dress goods fabric of moderate cost now on the market, is regular in width, so that the dressmaker knows at a glance just what she can do with it. The imitations are different in this respect.

THAT'S THE REASON for its being in the stock of every retailer of consequence in the country.

Made only by PACIFIC MILLS, 70 Kilby Street, BOSTON

LERMA FLANNELS

28 INCHES WIDE Pleated Back Fast Colors High grade printed fabrics for wrappers, traveling house and street gowns, dressing sacks, shirt-waists and dresses for children. Acknowledged the best of their class. Variety of patterns. Retail prices of both, 10c per yard. MARK

Be sure that the tickets all bear the name of the makers, the Hamilton Manufacturing Co. If your home retailer will not supply you, write to JOY, LANGDON & Co., Manufacturers' Agents Boston and New York

ADMIRAL PERCALES

Improved Finish Fast Colors 36 INCHES WIDE

"Duchess" Embroidery Hoops

Every woman who does embroidery work needs "Duchess" Hoops—the only perfect and satisfactory hoop ever made. Its special features are patented and cannot be found in any other hoop. The left hand around the inner hoop is an elastic cushion which gives the required tension in complete cushion protects the fabric and embroiled work from injury when being placed in or removed from the hoops, and also allows the fabric to be drawn taut without injury while in the hoops. There are no attachments to catch the silks, nor any metal to rust or stain the fabric. Made of selected hardwood—smoothly finished with rounded edges.

You Will Want "Duchess" Hoops For The Embroidery You Make For Christmas

Special Free Offer To You 18,000 dealers have been selling "Duchess" Hoops for 10 years. We are now offering them at a special price. We will send you, post paid, a sample pair of "Duchess" Hoops. Or—send us 50 cents with your own and your dealer's name and address, and the names and addresses of five friends who want "Duchess" Hoops, and we will send the five hoops and a hoop free to you. Send today while this offer is open—it will not appear again.

NOTE—The above offer includes "Duchess" Hoops in sizes 4, 5, 6, 7 or 8-inch, and "Duchess-Oval" Hoops in sizes 4 1/2 by 9 inches and 6 by 12 inches. Be sure to mention styles and sizes wanted. The "Duchess-Oval" has the same felt cushion as the "Duchess" (round) Hoops. The Oval shape accounts for its name. Address: GIBBS MFG. CO., Station R 1, Canton, O.

Buy from your Dealer if he sells the Genuine "Duchess" Hoop. Do not take an inferior imitation. For your own protection, see that the registered trade mark "Duchess" is on every hoop.

The DeBevoise Brassiere

Do You Realize that the women with the most beautiful figures you meet every day, wear

Alas! some, French cut undergarments, which gives the perfect lines you desire. Stronger than a corset cover. It holds the shoulders straight, causes deep breathing, supports the bust properly and gives you an altogether better figure. Women from all over the country write us constantly of their entire satisfaction.

You Can Have an Equally Beautiful Figure NEW FALL STYLES NOW READY Open Either Front or Back

Made of Fine Balise or Lanouk. Beautifully trimmed with lace, ribbons or embroidery, and easily laundered. Sold at $1.00, or in combination with Full Circular Front Bust, $2.50 up. At all stores. Write us today for handsome catalog with colored plates, showing how each style is worn, stating dealer's name, or send $1. Give best measure. Dept. 11

Chas. R. DeBevoise Company, 33 Union Square, New York Factory, Newark, N. J.

Style 1123—Open Front Style 1106—Open Back

PREVENTS MIXING THE FAMILY TOOTH BRUSHES

Each member of the household chooses a different Prophylactic emblem. Number is on the yellow box which protects and guarantees. Handle is curved—reaches all teeth; bristles trimmed to clean behind and between teeth. Has hole and hook to hang brush by and keep it dry in your own place. Made under American sanitary conditions. By mail or at dealers.

Adults' 35c. Youths' 25c. Children's 20c.

Prophy-lactic

Send for our free booklet, "Tooth Brushes," FLORENCE MFG. CO., 110 Pine St., Florence, Mass.

Nancy
Hanks
Lincoln
Public
Library